PHYSIOLOGY OF THE BRAIN. The functions of the brain are the most obscure su well as the most fascinating branch of physiology; but, in spite of the obvious dimoultles of the subject. Science continues to work at it, and not without success. It is well known that remarkable progress has been made during the last ten er lifteen years in what is called the localination of function' in the brain, by defining with more or less accuracy certain aross or centres' as the seat of particular actions and sensations; but no attempt has been made to penetrate the mystery of thought or intellect in the same way. Now, however, as will be seen by a telegram we publish elsewhere, Professor Flechnig, Rector of Leipzig University, comes forward with the claim that he has discovered and defined those parts of the brain which discharge the higher functions of the mind. There are, he says, four centres which differ ; from all the rest of the cerebrum in structure, and their remarkable development in man essentially distinguishes the human brain from that of the lower animals. Their function is to establish a connecting link between the organs of sense, and to convert sensations into ideas. In the absence of more detailed information respecting this theory and the evidence on which it is based, it is impossible to estimate the precise value of Professor Flechaig's discovery, but it appears to be quite in keeping with what is already known of the brain, and to constitute a highly interesting step in the direction indicated by previous results. It does not contradict or overthrow them, but advances beyond them. The line of experimental research was like an oyster shell, and I'm sure it was followed in recent years by Ferrier, Hitzig, rough as a nutmeg grater. What I ate, which and others, in clucidating the motor and sensory functions of the brain has its obvious limits, and perhaps those limits have been reached. Experiments on the exposed brain of a monkey can never throw any light on the operations of the mind, and if any advance is to be made in mental physiology, recourse must be had to another and an older method of investigation—the method of observation by the aid of minute anatomy, especially, applied to the brain in development and in disease. That has evidently been the line adopted by Professor Flechnig, and, whatever may be the eventual fate of his theories, their announcement cannot fail to stimulate further research in this rather neglected field. Insanity especially affers an unlimited opening for careful and exact; work. Science remains in a deplorably strength. THE HANDFUL OF THINGS WE KNOW. Several years ago an American hamorist and poet published some verses called Little Breeches. This was an odd name given to a very small boy who was caught out in a tremendons snowstorm, and finally found in some hay quite a distance from the house. However the Boy got there bothered everybody to explain. It was certain he never could have walked. He his father said the angels must have done it; 'they just stooped down and toted him to where it was tale and warm, he said.' The poetry about it (supposed to have been written by the youngster's father) starts off in this way :--

> l don't go much on religion, But I've a middling tight grip, sir, On the handful of things I know.

That's it; the handful of things we know. There aren't many of 'em, but there are a few. And one of them is this: That for a hundred results there is only one cause. Nature develops and makes differences; never a new force. Here, for example, is an incident which shows our meaning. About Christmas, 1889, Mr E. B. Wright had an attack of influenza. Previous to this he had always been strong and hearly. Well, he got over the influenza; still, it had given bim (as he says) 'a snake.' After this he got along fairly well, until February of this year (1892) when the influenza attacked him again, This time the malady 'meant business.' Nearly every bone and muscle in his body sched like sore teeth. His skin was hot and dry, and to bed he was obliged to go. For sixteen days he was under a doctor. At the end of that time he found himself alive and that was about all you could say for him.

In his letter he goes on to tell what happened next. 'I had a foul taste in the mouth,' he says, and tooth and tongue were covered with a thick slimy phlegm. My wife says my tengue wasn't much, gave me pain in the chest and sides. After a mouthful or two I felt full and blown out, and I used to swell to a great size. By-and-by a hacking cough set in and my breathing got short and quick. At night I lay for hours grasping for breath, and often coughed so-I was afraid I should burst a blood vessel. I got weaker and was like a broken-winded horse. The doctor said it was asthma, but he wasn't able to relieve it. Although I live only two minutes' walk from the factory where I work, I had to stop and rost on my way many a time. * Thus matters went with me until Jane, 1892. Then one day I took up the Essex Newsman, and read of a man living at Earsham, near Bungay, having been cuted by Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup. I got some of this medicine from the International Tea Company, Braintree. After a few doses my breathing grew casior, and by keeping on with the Syrup my food soon digested, the cough left me, and I gained Eessex, August 23rd, 1892.

Now let us see how this illustrates the proposition we started out with. For almost three years Mr Wright was ill with what seemed like a series of different diseases. He had the influenza twice, the asthma once, and another disease which he gives no name to-even if he recognised it. Look for a moment at the variety and incongruity of the pains and stomach, and when Stigel's Syrup set that What, then, is one thing of the handful of things we know? Answer: That nearly all sorts of diseases are really symptoms of indigestion and dyspepsia, and that Mother Scigel's Curative Syrup cures it. Double that fact up in your fist and hold on hosts of letters from people who have received
